MISS SHEWMAKER HERALD WINNER

Fifteen-Year-Old Girl's Essay in Baby Contest Gets Watch.

TO PRINT OTHER EFFORTS

Best Composition from Graded Schools, by Miss Bessie Pearce, Will Appear Tomorrow.

MISS LILLIAN SHEWMAKER,
Winner of High School Gold Watch.

The Herald this morning is printing the winning composition in the "better baby" essay competition. It was written by Miss Lillian Shewmaker, 15 years old, of 500 Rhode Island avenue northwest, who is in her second year at Central High School. Miss Shewmaker wins the Elgin movement gold watch offered to the high school girl writing the best essay.

Tomorrow morning The Herald will print the essay taking the grand prize offered to girls in the public graded schools. This essay was written by Miss Bessie Pearce, 14 years old, of 712 Fifth street southeast, who is in Section B, Eighth grade, Congress Heights school. Miss Pearce will be awarded the imported movement Lady Suffolk gold watch.

It is possible the two other winning essays also will be printed in The Herald on succeeding days, although this has not definitely been determined by the "better baby" contest editor. Miss Lillian Santucci, 1633 Newton street northwest, a first-year student at Business High school, wins a hand-carved gold bracelet for second honors among high school girls; and Miss Idamay Lang, 14 years old, of 25 Adams street northwest, wins a similar prize for the second best essay among graded school girls.

The prizes are still on exhibit in the window of Charles Schwartz and Son, 708 Seventh street northwest. They will be awarded to the contest winner at formal exercises to be held Saturday night at 8 o'clock at the central exhibit of the baby week campaign committee, Fifteenth and P streets northwest.

Essay that Won Gold Watch.

Here is the essay of Miss Shewmaker, who won first prize for high school girls: As the destiny of the world lies in the hands of the children of today, I can think of nothing more interesting and important than the proper caring for babies, that they may be ready for this great work.

What a thrill a mother feels when a new life is placed in her hands! The first question now deep within her heart is, "How can I best care for my baby?"

By watching her careful attention to her child, her successful experience has given men the following knowledge concerning the care of babies:

Its nourishment was first considered. Following nature, as the best guide, she found no method of infant feeding so beneficial to her baby as her own milk. Given during the first few weeks at regular intervals of two hours. (The intervals should be lengthened as the child grows older). By the time baby was six months old she was giving it a little orange or prune juice early in the morning; also zwieback and well-cooked gruels.

In the morning, when she prepared to bathe him, she ad the room 70 degrees Fahrenheit, and free of draughts. The clean clothes, soap, powder, vaseline and towels were placed within reach. No sooner than an hour after his meal she bathed him with tepid water, using a soft cloth, and a little pure soap. After drying the skin, she gently massaged him, and dusted a little powder in the folds of his skin. She never forgot to wash his eyes and mouth with pieces of absorbent cotton dipped in a weak, boric acid solution. The nostrils were cleaned with twists of cotton, smeared with vaseline.

When she had put on his soft flannel underwear, and his unstarched, white dress, she nursed him, and put him in his clean bed in a well ventilated, darkened room to sleep. Nothing was allowed to disturb his sleep, except his meals, as babies do most of their growing while asleep.

He was given plenty of boiled water to drink, never allowed to wear soiled clothes, and was handled only when necessary.

In the evening, before putting on his night clothes, she rubbed his body with olive oil, and after his last meal for the day, he slept soundly until morning.

Thus, day by day, he thrived—began to notice and to love all nature in the midst of a happy, healthy childhood.

WILLIAMS MUST GIVES RIGGS DATA

Comptroller of Currency Subpoenaed to Bring Treasury
Correspondence Into Court.

MAY REVEAL "MALICE"

Frequent Clashes Between Counsel Occur—Stanchfield Alleges Persecution by Treasury.

John Skeiton Williams, comptroller of the currency, was subpoenaed yesterday to bring today into the trial of Charles C. Glover, William J. Flather, and Henry H. Flather, Treasury correspondence relating to the Riggs National Bank. The correspondence demanded not only passed between the comptroller and the bank's house, but between Williams and Secretary McAdoo.

The subpoena was requested by counsel for the accused bankers and issued by Justice Siddons, the trial judge. It is expected to throw light upon the contented of counsel for the defense that the bank was "maliciously" treated by Williams and that bank officials and not the bank itself dealt in stocks.

The Treasury official also is to produce in court a report of Bank Examiner Hann on his examination of the bank in May, 1913.

Frequent Clashes.

repeated clashes between counsel for the government and defense occurred at the hearing yesterday, the third since the trial began. The tiffs largely were over the prosecution's protests of the manner in which Attorney John B. Stanchfield brought the opening argument of the defense to the jury. Justice Siddons overruled the prosecution's objections and sustained Attorney Stanchfield.

The morning session of the hearing was taken up by Attorney Stanchfield's opening statement, continued from Tuesday; by the admittance of papers from four witnesses, and by the introduction by the prosecution of the bill of complaint of the bank in bringing the famous injunction suit against Treasury officials last summer. The bill was read by Assistant Prosecuting Attorney Archer and at the conclusion of the reading, at 3 o'clock, court was adjourned.

Today's hearing will be consumed almost entirely by the prosecution's reading of lengthy pleadings and answers filed in the injunction suit, it was thought yesterday.

Attacking the alleged "malice" of Comptroller of the Currency Williams toward the bank, Attorney John B. Stanchfield finished the opening statement for the defense which he began Tuesday. He read excerpts from many letters between the bank and the comptroller.

Admits Possible Error.

Declaring the bank did a business of $300,000,000 a year he admitted discrepancies might creep into statements made by officials concerning such vast transactions.

"Instead of letting these trivial matters pass as would have been ordinarily done in dealings among gentlemen," he said, "the Comptroller of the Currency made mountains out of mole-hills and wrote abusive communications to the bank. In one instance, when Mr. Glover voluntarily communicated with the Treasury official, acknowledging a discrepancy of statement, the latter wrote back and frankly informed Mr. Glover that he had told a lie. The comptroller used liar, perjurer, and other similar epithets in his official correspondence with the bank officials. There are people in official places who might make a statement to a man's face which they would not dare make in public, he declared.

With the completion of Attorney Stanchfield's statement four witnesses were called. They were Milton E. Alles, vice president of the Riggs bank; Herbert J. Hand and Henry L. Fullerton, representing New York brokers, and Frank Cunningham, assistant clerk of the District Supreme Court.

The witnesses were subpoenaed to produce records and correspondence, and testifying that they had complied accordingly, were excused.

TAG DAY FOR BABIES PLANNED.

Funds Will Be Raised Wednesday for Day Nursery Association.

Next Wednesday will be tag day for the benefit of the Day Nursery and Dispensary Association. On the streets, in department stores and other public places girls, boys, men and women will appeal to passers-by to take a tag to help the babies.

The women in charge of tag day point out that the person who pays ten cents for a tag on the street will by so doing provide that much milk to some baby born to a mother in unfortunate circumstances. Such mothers flock to the headquarters of the association, 466 1-2 N street southwest, daily for the food which they cannot afford to buy for their little ones.
